Experience

Roger Koehn started with Inman Foodservice Group in June of 2008, assisting the Field Support Project Manager. With experience in the construction business spanning over twenty years and a true interest in the foodservice industry, Inman was a natural fit for Mr. Koehn.

This experience has led him to be a true asset to the Inman family by easing the tremendous load the Field Support Project Manager carries on a daily basis by coordination in the office when the manager is in the field; reviewing, marking and stamping shop drawings received from architects, engineers and foodservice contractors; to site visits for final review and punch. This ensures a smooth transition from a two-dimensional drawing to turning the key on a high-quality, new facility. This is done always keeping the owner's success in mind throughout the process.

The other hat Mr. Koehn wears in the Inman Group is architectural rendering of the Inman Interiors and Foodservice division concepts. Bringing a two-dimensional drawing to life in three dimensions gives a client the ability to view their finished product before a shovel has been turned on site. It is much easier for the owner/financier to grasp an idea when he can tour the facility and make modifications as needed before costly change orders both bog the project down and extend finish dates. It is all done using the actual finishes and materials represented in computer format.
